The $150 million does not account for the many other lawsuits already filed, which are being consolidated into a single class-action suit.

Employment Practices Liability

After firing a recovering opioid addict, a New Jersey-based pharmaceutical and medicine manufacturing company must pay $150,000 to settle a resulting disability discrimination lawsuit. The lawsuit was brought on by the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC). The company allegedly violated Title I of the Americans with Disabilities Act by terminating an employee who tested positive for a legally controlled substance. The lawsuit also alleges that even after the company learned that the employee was participating in a medication-assisted treatment program, he was forced into counseling with a clinical psychologist and his return to work became contingent on discontinued use of the legally prescribed medication.

Wrongful Death

Sunrise Tire and Lube Service Inc., a California service shop, must pay $27 million after tires that the company worked on detached from a tractor-trailer and killed a woman in New Mexico. The victim, from Pennsylvania, was struck by one of two detached tires while on a cross-country motorcycle trip with her husband. The collision pushed her to the outside lane, where she hit a tractor-trailer. A jury awarded the plaintiffs $17 million in compensatory damages and $10 million in punitive damages after attorneys for Sunrise failed to appear at trial.
